CAMP

GRAY WHALE

From January to March Baja becomes the world epicenter of gray whales. Every year, these giants of the sea migrate to the coastal lagoons of Baja California Sur to have their young and mate, making Baja the best place in the world for gray whale watching. In addition to gray whales, it is possible to see humpback whales outside the bay, thousands of seabirds that use these areas as their winter homes, sea lions resting and coyotes on the islands.

Where will we camp?

Our camp is located on Magdalena Island, 20 minutes by boat from Puerto San Carlos. We camp between the dunes and the sea, on a beach where there will be no other people several kilometers away. The camp has black out tents, enough shade for all our explorers, kitchen and a porta potty style restroom. When we are not on safari looking for whales and other marine animals, in the camp we have paddleboards and we are very well located for hiking on the island and in the spectacular dunes within walking distance of the camp.

Example itinerary:

Day 1: Departure from La Paz, BCS at 10:00am. Our driver will pick you up at your place of lodging in La Paz and take you to the departure site in Puerto San Carlos, 3 hours from La Paz by road. Once in San Carlos, we will board a boat that will take us to the camp. The rest of the afternoon is free where we will hike, and rest to depart early the next day.

Day 2: Light breakfast and start of activities at 7:30am. We will go on safari to look for whales and other marine animals. The expedition lasts approximately 6 hours. Later we will return to the camp and have the evening for leisure.

Day 3: Light breakfast and start of activities at 7:00am. We go on safari to look for whales, get to know the mangroves and depending on the conditions to look for coyotes in specific places on the island. The expedition lasts 6 hours. We return to the camp to eat lunch, and the boat will take us back to Puerto San Carlos, where the driver will be waiting for us for our return to La Paz.
